

PRESS RELEASE

Sodexo honoured with 14th Consecutive International British Safety Council Award

Aberdeen, Scotland – March 2013 Sodexo, world leader in Quality of Daily Life Services, is delighted to announce its receipt of the prestigious British Safety Council Award 2013. The award recognises competence in terms of health and safety management systems and the winners are chosen from over 500 entries each year after careful adjudication by an independent panel of chartered health and safety professionals. See www.britsafe.org/isa for more details.

Sodexo secured an impressive merit commendation. Better still, it has now won this award for an outstanding 14 consecutive years. This sets Sodexo apart from its competitors, as no other offshore hotel services provider can boast the same.

Commenting on the achievement, John Fraser, Sodexo's HSE Manager said, "Each and every one of our teams plays their part in working safely at our worksites, looking for the potential cause of the next accident and personally taking accountability to eliminate it. HSE Management is a top priority at Sodexo - it's in our culture – and it's a fundamental we share with our clients and customers alike."

Ian Russell, Sodexo's UK Divisional Director comments, "Every day, thousands of customers rely on our safety systems, so our performance in this area is crucial. Winning this award clearly demonstrates Sodexo's global commitment to achieving a health & safety culture, workforce engagement and world class performance. Moreover this recognition will provide greater motivation for our teams who remain fully focussed on continual improvements in our safety results."
